Love your local farmers’ markets

The flip side of so many months spent close to home is that we’ve all become adept at cooking for ourselves, settling in to the daily chopping, sautéing, braising, baking, rolling and mixing. If you were inspired to grow a garden, you may be celebrating some homegrown gems right now, finding joy in the flow of seed to harvest to plate. But even if you don’t have dirt under your fingernails, we can all celebrate the fact that our local farmers’ markets are still operating, providing invaluable food security, nourishment and a regional economic bright spot in this devastating crisis. Now is the time to use your money with intention, to think about who, what and where you want to boost up. So go visit a farmers’ market and vote with your dollars, even if you have a micro-farm of produce at home...there’s surely something you can find to eat.
